

A good Samaritan

Clifford Slusher at Paul Laurence Dunbar High has always taken time to talk with students concerning both academic material and life situations. Many teachers talk about being involved with the community; Mr. Slusher is involved. The one thing I have noticed is that Mr. Slusher does not ask or expect a student to do something he would not do. For example, a truck ran out of gas just up from the entrance to Dunbar. Mr. Slusher was on his way home after staying late when he saw the two men trying to get the truck off of the road. Mr. Slusher quickly turned back into the drive at Dunbar, left his car, and began pushing the truck. He helped the men get the truck off the road and then drove one of the men to the gas station to get gas. Did he ask for anything in return? Did he look for a pat-on-the-back? No. Mr. Slusher simply shook the man's hand, got in his car, and drove home.
