

Participation grows at State Language Festival

Almost 2,000 students participated in the 2008 KWLA State Language Festival, held May 10 at the University of Kentucky. There was an increase in participants across all languages, according to the Kentucky World Language Association.

“The festival gives Kentucky language students an outlet to use the languages they work so hard to learn,” said Jeff Rogers, executive director of the festival. “The festival also brings together avid language learners from across the state. It is great to see so many Kentuckians promoting language learning and intercultural understanding in our primary and secondary schools.”

For complete results, go to www.kwla-online.org/festival/results08.html.

View the Fayette County Results