

On the first day of school, the mother of a second-grader mistakenly put the wrong bus number and bus stop on her daughter's transportation form. There are actually two streets that have the same name and although they are close together, they are in two different neighborhoods. When the bus stopped at the drop-off listed on the child's bus tag, the child knew she was in the wrong place and explained to the driver, Phillip Canter, that her house was in the neighborhood down the road. Mr. Canter took the time to drive the child directly to her home and check to make sure the child was at the right home before leaving to drive to his next stop. Mr. Canter could have brought her back to the school or taken her to the bus garage, but he was kind enough to make a young child feel important and safe by taking her directly to her home! Mr. Canter definitely knows what it means when we say It's About Kids!

-- Submitted by Janet Doss, child guidance specialist at Liberty Elementary